Student Opportunity Fund: Application Guidance

Fall 2026 round. Operations Office. Fictional, for training only.

The Student Opportunity Fund pays for travel, field work, conference presentations, research supplies and unpaid internship costs. Awards are up to $1,999.

Who can apply

Enrolled undergraduate students. The scholarship committee decides eligibility and awards; the completeness check described below does not.

A complete application has

1. The application form, signed. The form has Part 1 (your details) and Part 2 (declaration). Part 2 must be signed and dated by the applicant. A typed electronic signature (“/s/” followed by your applicant ID) counts as a signature. A printed name or ID on its own does not.
2. A transcript. An unofficial transcript is fine, but it must be attached. A note that it will follow does not count.
3. Two references from two different people, such as an instructor, a supervisor or an advisor. Each must give the referee’s role and contact details. Two letters from the same person count as one reference.
4. A budget. List each cost. The amount requested from the fund must be under $2,000. If other funding covers part of the cost, show it: only the amount requested has to be under $2,000. The items must add up to the totals shown.

A personal statement is recommended but not required.

How applications are checked

The Operations Office checks each application for completeness only, and records the page where each item was found. Incomplete applications are returned to the applicant with a list of what is missing, and can be resubmitted until the deadline. The scholarship committee then reviews the complete applications and decides awards.
